That's a good idea. Thanks for checking.

Thanks Josh.

The paper could be made public, so maybe we could just cite the information as "BLM data."

I think that should work but I'll check with Ben too. Right now the audience is internal but we've been told that this could potentially be made public (who knows).

Hi Ann,

It has not been published or made available to the public yet. My suggestion would be to cite the study itself (the one sent along with the spreadsheet and that Ben recently reviewed) and cite it as a draft. Do you all think that is okay? Your audience is internal right?

Hey Josh,

A few weeks ago you had shared with us a workbook for a study you guys did on the economic effects of National Conservation Lands and National Monuments. We used the expenditures/economic impacts associated with GSENM to derive our economic contribution estimates for Bears Ears National Monument. Has the study been published or made available online yet? We are trying to figure out how to cite it. Do you have any ideas?

Thanks!

Ann
